AIG Institute Established in Osaka
Aims to be Thought Leader in Risk Management

TOKYO, December 1, 2017 – AIG Japan Holdings KK today announced the opening of its AIG Institute in Osaka, an internal research unit, established as a research and knowledge sharing institute that will focus on improving risk management capabilities across the public and private sectors. The opening of the institute and its focus on building better risk management capabilities is one of the eight areas included in the partnership agreement between AIG Japan and Osaka Prefecture signed and announced in August, 2016.

Created not to generate profit, but instead to increase awareness and understanding of risk, the AIG Institute aims to provoke discussion about risk management and contribute to creating a society with more robust risk management capabilities. Going beyond the standard definition of what an insurance company does, and as a thought leader in risk management, the institute will explore a multilateral approach to effective risk-response methods and will also look at the psychology of people facing risk.

AIG Institute will be based within AIG Japan’s Osaka headquarters located at Grand Front Osaka and adjacent to Knowledge Capital, which works on innovation for companies, universities, and other institutions. Operating like a hub to disseminate information and advice on risk management, the institute aims to collaborate with those external organizations and with the many teams internally at AIG companies across the globe and their affiliates that research risk on an ongoing basis.

AIG Institute will hold its first “AIG Institute Forum” in January 2018 and the theme for the event will be Nankai Trough earthquake preparedness, with a focus on understanding public financial risk.
